What is a homograph?

A homograph consists of two or more words that are spelled the same but have entirely different origins and meanings.

Some homographs have identical pronunciations, but others differ in pronunciations. This is different from a homophone, which is both spelled and pronounced the same.

Tip: -graph is "write," so the words are written the same way.

Example 1:

A tear rolled down my face after the sad movie

I told my sister not to tear my homework.

Example 2:

Can I Borrow some lead for my pencil?

Please lead the students quietly down the hall.

I lead the class down the hall.

How to Identify the Correct Homograph

Look at the following sentence:

Jennifer has been playing the bass in the band for the last two years.

Step 1: Identify the homograph in the sentence.

The homograph in this sentence is the word bass, which can either mean a musical instrument or a type of fish.

Step 2: Identify the context in which the homograph is used.

According to the context of the word bass in the sentence, it is evident that it does not relate to fish since Jennifer cannot play a type of fish. Therefore, the correct meaning of bass in the sentence is a musical instrument that Jennifer has been playing for the last two years.

- Lead us through the dark woods
- The package was as heavy as lead
- Please close the door
- We sat close to each other
- I want to live in Paris one day.
- He likes to fish with live bait.
- The wind blew the leaves away.
- Wind up the toy and watch it go!
- The white dove is a beautiful bird.
- She dove into the swimming pool.
- The desert is sandy, hot, and dry.
- Don't desert a friend in need.
